Summer flowering bulbs add colour and interest to garden beds, borders, and containers. Many varieties are not winter hardy and must be pulled before the first fall frost. These bulbs can be stored through the winter and planted again. Refer to individual web pages or package information for more details about planting and care.

Planting & Care

Bulbs should be planted as soon as possible and can be pre-sprouted in potting soil indoors to encourage earlier blooms. This is a helpful method in short season areas, as pre-sprouted bulbs may bloom weeks earlier than those planted directly in the garden. If you can't start your bulbs early, store them in a cool, dark location until planting time. Allow airflow around the bulbs to reduce the risk of mold.

Some varieties like anemone and ranunculus will benefit from soaking in room-temperature water for up to four hours. It's important to not oversoak as this can lead to rot.

As a general rule, bulbs should be planted 2-3 times as deep as they are tall. Always refer to the package to determine the best location for planting. Some varieties require full sun areas, while others prefer part shade.

When necessary, protect cold sensitive varieties from frost with row cover or frost blankets.

Before the first frost, it's possible to dig up cold sensitive bulbs and store them until the next growing season. Clean dirt from your bulbs, then leave them to dry for several days. Store bulbs in a cool, dark area with good airflow. Bulbs can be stored in vermiculite, sand, wood shavings, or other mediums that retain some moisture while allowing airflow.
